His whole life showed us what we can do.
He healed the sick, the blind and the lame,
He said we can go and do the same.
He fed the hungry with the help of a boy.
He cared about others, turning sadness

He chose twelve friends to be on his team.
He taught them to be kind and not be mean.
He calmed a storm and walked on water.
He raised from the dead the centurion's daughter.

He cared for everyone, young and old.

When things were unfair, or simply not right.
He talked to the people no one wanted
to know.
He went to the places no one wanted to go.
He spoke words of love, hope and peace.
He went the extra mile for the lost and the least.

friend in all the world. I wonder what you'd do if your best friend needed your help.

I wonder, is there anyone you wouldn't help. What if it wasn't your best friend, not even a friend?

hated enemy in the whole wide world?

Open your eyes and look down at your hands. In the kindness of our hands, we see a glimpse of road from one city to the next. Then suddenly – ambush! Muggers leapt out from behind the trees and rocks, beating and kicking till the traveller lay broken and bleeding by the path, and ran off taking with them everything the traveller had owned.

Who would help? Ah, here comes someone from the temple, hustling and bustling on their way to worship. Surely a godly person would help. No, the godly person takes one look and goes on hustling and bustling by on the other side of the road.

Ah, here comes someone else from the temple, looks like a musician or a door keeper perhaps.
Maybe this person's a bit more practical, surely this person will help. This godly person stops...

lightning.

Ah, here comes someone else. It's a foreigner, a stranger, this person won't help at all. Strangers don't help strangers here – it's too dangerous. And foreigners don't help foreigners – the two groups don't get on. If two godly people on their way to the temple won't stop and help, then this

The foreigner saw the traveller in distress and straight away knew what had to be done. Wounds were washed and cleaned and bandaged.. and that was not all. The traveller was lifted gently off strength, all paid for by the foreigner who had come to the rescue.

This story is a parable, a picture story, of course.
